The Swiss Panerai brand was started in 1860 the brains behind the company was a man called Giovanni Panerai who was born in 1825 in Florence. He opened the first shop in Florence on the Ponte alle Grazie; it was from here that he forged his connections with some of the most sought after and prestigious Swiss watch manufacturers. He worked tirelessly to build the brand and success was born on hard work and the desire to create the best watches that money could buy. It was in 1876 that Giovanni Panerai decided that it was time to hand over control of the business to his son Leon Francesco Panerai, sadly in 1897 Giovanni Panerai died and little would he have known that his company that started with such humble beginnings would be a world force in the twenty first century. It was in 1890 that the grandson of the founder Guido Panerai took control of the company for over 40 years, Guido gave Swiss Breitling a much needed boost and breathed new life into the company by specialising in the creation of very high precision mechanical watches of which the Swiss Breitling company became the official supplier to the Royal Italian Navy. This was exactly what the company needed in order to propel the brand forward and demonstrate that their movements were the best that money could buy. Guido Panerai in the forty years he was in charge created some superb precision instruments and kept with the long running association with the Royal Italian Navy. It was in 1934 that Guido Panerai stepped down from the business and handed over the reigns to his two children Giuseppe and Maria, it was Maria who took control of running the shop while Giuseppe being technically minded devoted himself to the supply of underwater watches, instruments, torches, wrist compasses and wrist depth gauges to the Italian Navy. It was down to Giuseppe Panerai that the now world famous watches including the Radiomir and Luminor came into existence. Panerai introduction, Panerai can be regarded as a 100% Military watch, because since the World War I, Panerai had been providing the Italian Navy with the sophisticated undersea device such as the counting device for Torpedo, the depth gauge and compass worn by the divers. The special connection between Panerai and Italian Navy actually tracks back to 1938 when Panerai started to create timepiece for Italian Navy. The first watch Panerai made for Italian Navy is the 47mm Radiomir which is intended for the soldiers wearing wetsuit. In the early 1990s, to cut the military budget, Italian government gradually reduced the purchase of Panerai watch. Losing the one and only customer of Italian Navy, Panerai met great setback in sales. Every cloud has its silver line. In 1997 The Vendome Group purchased Panerai with a determination to turn it into a cult brand. The family were in control of the Swiss Panerai company for well nearly 150 years until it was sold to the Vendome Group in 1997, which are now part of the huge watch company Richemont. This was essential for the survival of the Swiss Panerai company in such a competitive market and the quality of the watches was increased and new production lines started up. It is testament to the work carried out by Giovanni Panerai and his successors that the Swiss Panerai watch brand has survived the test of time and is now going from strength to strength, whilst some of the original watches that were designed way back in the early to mid 1900s are still being produced today. The Swiss Panerai watches can still be recognised from the modern day designs and this is credit to the original work in manufacturing and production that Giovanni Panerai and Guido Panerai were involved in.

Reasons to Collect Panerai Watches, Currently, Panerai has become one of the favorite collective items for collectors. Why is it so popular in collection? Here are the reasons., 1. Rich and unique history, 2. As the private military watch, Panerai had never sold to the public before. Therefore, it becomes a hot object at auction., 3. Panerai has its own personality and never drift with the current. With no fear and compromise Panerai was faithful to its original style to launch its watches to the public many years ago., 4. Without conceit Panerai keeps improving itself. In addition to style and material, Panerai has invested a lot in develop movement for he is aware that inner beauty is what can hold the hearts of customers and collectors.,, What ' s not to love about radio? It ' s keeps you updated on news and information, it ' s entertaining, and it enables users to discover new artists and songs. According to Tom Conrad, the CTO and Head of Product at, almost 70 percent of all music listening happens on the radio. He told us that radio is currently undergoing a shift as people are transitioning from traditional radio with DJs picking songs, to Internet radio options with personalized listening experiences. Do you find yourself listening more to traditional radio or Internet radio? As the leader in the music streaming space, Pandora believes that it is playing a key role in this shift since it strives to offer users a valuable radio experience. “ We like to set the challenge for ourselves to ensure that Pandora is the future of radio, ” said Conrad. As part of Pandora ' s ambitious effort, the company is currently revamping its service to provide a faster, easier, and more social experience for users. Conrad told us that the company started this mission around a year ago with these very goals in mind. To make the service faster, Pandora switched from Flash to HTML5. Conrad told us that this change has made a significant difference in the performance of the site. “ For the first time, I think, Pandora feels really native to the Web, ” he said. “ It ' s a subtle detail, but it underlies the whole new experience. ” For an easier user experience, Conrad explained that he wanted the site to operate with the same ease and simplicity that their mobile apps did. As a result, the “ ” includes better search functions, improved user control, more information about the music and the artists, among other features. The revamp also integrates social networking capabilities. Although user profiles have existed for some time, they were not widely utilized. Now, they become extremely relevant since they can be used to see a friend's recent activity. This activity will also appear in the new Music Feed stream, which will allow users to discover new music and share it. "We've been incredibly focused on solving the problem of how to create a really personalized music experience," said Conrad. "It's entirely about you when you come to Pandora." Although the "New Pandora" is only available to paid users at this time, it will be rolled out all users over next few weeks. To continue to personalize its service, Pandora also released that are specifically designed for users when they workout. The stations range from 80's Cardio to Pop Fitness to Classic Rock Power Workout, and users can further personalize each station by voting songs up or down. While some of these features are a result of what users attempt to do on Pandora, Conrad told us that the company also has a vision for the future of radio and incorporates features based upon this vision. "We have to lead the market," he said. "We have to create products that do things that people didn't even know they wanted." He went on to say that, even with all the hype around and the revamp and Pandora's continued vision would help the company maintain its leadership position. He cites Spotify's CEO labeling Spotify as the future of record stores and Pandora as the future of radio, which he thinks is a "perfect distinction." "We're nice complements to one another, and there is certainly room in the market for both," said Conrad. As for Clear Channel, he believes that its iHeartRadio service is further validation that the future of radio is personalized.
